Taurine is an English name given to the Nandipada symbol in Indian mythology. Nandipada is basically the shape of a foot of a Nandi. One of the earliest forms of miniature tools in the Barter Trade was the copy of living animals, like cow and bulls. Since actual animals were not feasible to exchange in day-to-day transactions, their miniatures were made in precious and semi-precious metals so that they would serve the purpose as well as be convenient to handle also. The Mould has a lid on the back which is now open and throws a flood of light on making it solid with mud. The reverse depicts a towered Goddess sitting upon a lion that springs from a rocky outcrop from which water flows. This latter feature has led to the suggestion that aqueducts or waterworks of some kind in Carthage were constructed or repaired at the State expense.

Urdu was the name of a Royal Camp mint. While the Royal army on move was going from place to place in order to conquer new and far distant regions of India, the Mughals, especially Akbar devised a “Portable Mint” that moved along with the Royal Mughal Army. The make-shift Mint had dual purpose: a) When a new fort or a city was conquered, the mint masters will immediately engrave new dies with the name of that place and struck coins to commemorate their victory over the enemy and hence record their victory in tangible forms; and b) in order to make payments to the army, the military officers constantly needed new supply of coined money, which was not possible to get enroute a distant place from the Capital. Hence the Mobile Mint minted coins during their halts and supplied fresh coins to be paid as wages. To solve the problem of the Mint Name on these coins, the Mughals devised a new Mint Name called Urdu, which was written on those coins. Historically, the word Urdu is derived from the Turkic word Ordu, which means Army!

The bold calligraphy and decorative fields indicate the issuer of the coin to be a Rajput Ruler then the traditional Mughal Emperor Ahmad Shah. The port-town of Rajapur is located in Konkan, near Goa. The Marathas took over this port from Adil Shahis of Bijapur Sultanate, and it remained with them till 1818 when the British conquered the Marathas. Due to the important centre of international trade, the Dutch and the English had established their factories at Rajapur. The fine calligraphy, broad flan, and the quite resemblance of the coin with those of the Mumbai mint, issued by the East India Company in the Bombay Presidency suggest that the coin might have been issued by the English under the East India Company in Bombay; making the coin a Great Rarity.

295 Maharaja Hate Singh (AD 1765-1768), Orchhanagar mint, Silver, Rupee, in the name of Shah Alam II, with the mint name Roshan Akhtar Orchhanagar mint, RY 6, the couplet on the obverse reads in Persian, Sikka zad bar haft kishwar, sayah faz-ilah; hami-din Muhammad Shah alam badshah (= coin struck in the seven climes in the shadow of Divine favour, the defender of the Faith of Muhammad, Emperor Shah Alam). Mint symbols of a Pataka (Royal banner) above in of din in the 2nd line of the legend; a Gada (mace) above kishwar in the 3rd line of the inscription; the standard Julus formula on the reverse reads sanah julus maimanat manus 6 zarb Roshan (Akhtar) Orchhanagar (= struck at the city of Rosha Akhtar Orchha, in the Regnal Year 6 associated with Prosperity). Extremely Fine+, Extremely Rare. Bhandare, Deyell and Lingen assign this extremely rare coin to Hate Singh who ruled only for 4 years, and issued this coin along with Zodiac Rupees as a part of his accessional ceremonies in AD 1765. The learned authors further think that these coins were minted at Jhansie in Uttar Pradesh, and might have been a part of the confirmations of the Marathas to the accession of Maharaja Hate Singh on the throne of Orchha State. In a way, this Rupee should be considered as a joint issue of the Marathas with the Orchha State (for complete discussion on the coin along with Zodiac Rupees, refer the research article of the three scholars in the JONS#213, 2012).
